An innovative mind helps me to reinvent myself.

Inventive thinking makes anything that I envision possible. Thinking outside the box shows me new angles and solutions to challenges in front of me.

I always search for alternative solutions when my employer assigns a difficult project to me. When I face time constraints, I exercise my mind to find ways to meet deadlines.

My originality is of good value to management meetings. Being able to throw fresh ideas on the table is a blessing. That ability puts me in a good light whenever I work as part of a team. I avoid restricting myself to what I know today.

Reinventing myself means making myself ready for whatever comes my way.

New sources of information are integral to developing my skill sets. I use the knowledge I gain creatively to market myself. Opening myself up to new opportunities means keeping abreast of what is happening around me.

In my school assignments, I avoid researching the obvious topics. I like to exercise my mind and be creative.

Having an innovative mind is a great way to expand my horizons.

Today, I focus on reinventing myself as the situations arise. My commitment to remaining flexible in anticipation of changing times is valuable. I am proud to be someone who refuses to be stuck in one place for my whole life.

Self-Reflection Questions:

1. What are some of the innovations at work that I am responsible for?
2. How willing am I to reinvent myself in order to attract new friends?
3. In what areas of my life do I exercise the most creativity?
